2. Who is it aimed at?

Training Goal: “Systemic Resilience Coach”

Coaches who support individuals, teams, and organizations in self-awareness and development. The goal is to enhance performance and resilience.

Target Group:

Psychologists, professionals in social fields, leaders, consultants, process facilitators, mentors, project managers, therapists, etc. – individuals looking to enter a new field.

Approach:

- Systemic focus but includes concepts and methods from various psychological theories (e.g., TA, depth psychology).
- Delivered interactively and on equal footing, with case applications.
- Access to a platform with slides and materials.

3. Why should you become a professional coach?

- You will significantly increase your job opportunities.
- Five years of study often don't fully prepare you for success in practice. Becoming a coach is a practical step in that direction.

What will you be needed for in the coming years?

- The collapse of the global economy calls for a return to individual strengths. People need RESILIENCE to navigate change: Prepare yourself for this transformation and show others how to do the same!
- Navigating change means mastering digitalization. The transition to a digitalized world creates tensions within organizations: Coaching, facilitation, and conflict resolution are in high demand.

Being a good coach is about attitude, role, and professionalism

- If you want to guide people through crises, intuition alone isn't enough. Impact emerges where attitude, method, and role align.
- Resilience is often treated as an individual skill. In reality, it manifests where structures, leadership, and culture intersect.
- Organizational resilience represents a paradigm shift. Many training programs provide tools – but are you ready to rethink your role? This is more challenging than any method.
- When was the last time you truly learned a new attitude?

4. What will you be able to do after the training?

- Launch your own coaching and facilitation sessions – equipped with mastered methods and ready-to-use applications.
- Establish yourself as an expert in psychological resilience – as an internal or external coach, people business expert, team coach, or leader.
- Strengthen individuals – you will know how to transform old behavior patterns, enhance personal resilience, and challenge people in crises.
- Develop teams into high-performing groups – you will learn how groups constructively handle resistance, reflect on setbacks, and collaboratively find new solutions.
- Guide organizations toward a stable future – you will help create structures, processes, and roles, connecting an organizational base with a culture of relationships.

6. Why is this training at Dr. Ulla Nagel recommended?

Coach training is increasingly being offered today. How can you recognize quality?

- The term is unprotected. You can distinguish yourself by earning a certificate from an officially recognized organization with at least 240 hours of training and an exam.
- My training institute is EASC-accredited, and with this certification, you become a professional systemic coach (EASC – European Association for Supervision and Coaching).
- The EASC advocates for the professional recognition of coaching across Europe.
- EASC teaching coaches are master coaches and certified trainers.

Currently, there is no continuing education funding available through SAB in Saxony.

Only job seekers, aspiring entrepreneurs, or individuals in temporary employment have specific funding opportunities.

For example, through the Qualification Opportunities Act of 2019:

<https://www.arbeitsagentur.de/vor-ort/bruehl/qualifizierungschancengesetz>

The respective local employment agency branch makes the decision. Therefore, you need a convincing argumentation (see source).

The fees can be paid on 20 monthly installments: 395 EUR each.

The total price without funding is 8,650.00 EUR plus the examination fee.

During the course of the training, you will also attend 12 hours of supervision, which you will refinance through your first coaching sessions.
